

My name is Brian Cattelle. My life has been filled with photography since my early years in high school. I remember when I developed my first black and white photo; the ominous glow of the red lights, the smell of the chemicals, the sound of the constantly running water, the anticipation as my image started to appear. I was hooked. For many years I was afforded the luxury of fully equipped dark rooms but as times changed so too did those opportunities. I shifted towards digital but my love for black and white remained the same. This is my life. Capturing moments in time is what I do. It's what makes me feel alive.
