BIO

Marcia Cooper was born in Queens, New York. She began making art at an early age and has never stopped.

Her work addresses the beauty and conflict, along with the magic and madness, of daily life while questioning our understanding of reality.

Often using found everyday materials, objects and sites that have been displaced, discarded, or forgotten; she works in a variety of media that include photography, site-specific installation, painting and sculpture.

Her work has been exhibited in contemporary art centers; museums, colleges, non-profit art galleries and historic sites across the US and internationally. Her work has also received numerous awards and is represented in catalogs, press reviews and private collections.
